From University of Chicago Press : Globalization in an Age of Crisis: Multilateral Economic Cooperation in the Twenty-First Century (National Bureau of Economic Research Conference Report) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Globalization in an Age of Crisis: Multilateral

Along with its painful economic costs, the financial crisis of 2008 raised concerns over the future of international policy making. As in recessions past, new policy initiatives emerged, approaches that placed greater importance on protecting national interests than promoting international economic cooperation. Whether in fiscal or monetary policies, the control of currencies and capital flows, the regulation of finance, or the implementation of protectionist policies and barriers to trade, there has been an almost worldwide trend toward the prioritizing of national economic security. But what are the underlying economic causes of this trend, and what can economic research reveal about the possible consequences?
